Baptist beliefs Edgar Young Mullins

As the crystal is formed in obedience to natural law, so a creed is formed in obedience to a spiritual law. Michael Angelo chiseled the marble into the heroic figure of Moses as the expression of his artistic vision. The great creeds are the chiseled results of spiritual vision. What men see and feel they must express. Doctrinal statements are given exact form for the same reason an Indian makes his arrow straight and sharp. Both are designed as weapons, or implements to achieve results. This is not written as a formal creed. If so it would be much more condensed. A very few sentences at most would be sufficient for each article. But there are a number of excellent Baptist creeds in existence already, and what is proposed here is not the setting up. The author of this volume expects to publish at some future time an extended work on Theology. It will not, however, supersede this manual, which is designed for more popular use.
