The Last Marlin : The Story of a Family at Sea Fred Waitzkin

The mystique and adventure of deep-sea fishing color a family memoir reminiscent of A River Runs Through It

Fred Waitzkin's moving account of fatherhood is still imprinted on the minds of those who read the book or watched the film Searching for Bobby Fischer. Now he reaches back to his own childhood to write a sweeping family saga of love and betrayal.

Fred's father Abe is a brilliantly talented salesman, a sickly man whose relentless will drives him to succeed. He marries an eccentric abstract artist and thereby forges an alliance with her wealthy father. The marriage founders, and Fred's world is threatened by his mother's need to realize herself as an artist, by his father's declining health, by duplicity, and by revenge. In order to keep head above water while family and fortune threaten to go down around him, Fred fishes. In scenes that range from Great Neck, Long Island, to the boats of drug smugglers on Bimini to the marlin-rich waters of the Gulf Stream, he sinks boats and battles thousand-pounders, believing that fishing is the answer to almost all problems.
